'Shenanigans'

Editor:

Thank you for shining the light on the arrogant actions of local builder Travis Schneider, and the responses to his building violations by the Humboldt County Planning Commission (NCJ Daily, Aug. 8).

Mr. Schneider needs to be held accountable for ignoring the stop work order. It's creepy to read his scripted sounding remarks; since he keeps invoking images of his children — "tears streaming down their faces," "being tucked into bed" — I want to hear how he teaches the kiddies simple concepts, like, "No means no" or "Stop right now." At the end of the most recent meeting, Mr. Schneider pledges to seek approval "at the local level." Is that what the image consultant is recommending now?

The defense (devotion?) iterated for Mr. Schneider by Planning Commission Chair Bongio tracks like a trail of slime. His racist remarks are unacceptable and he should already be gone. It is also appropriate to question his fitness for the job: he defends Mr. Schneider's 8,000-square-foot mansion as consistent with the others in the area that are half that size — stating nearby houses are "in the 4,000 to 6,000 square foot range." It calls into question his sense of proportion. Really, he needs to resign if only to spare us from his public displays of obsequiousness.

Trust in government erodes when such shenanigans arise "at the local level." Thanks for keeping us informed.

'He Needs to Resign'

Editor:

In your article about Arcata City Councilmember Brett Watson seeking re-election ("Outcry," Sept. 8), he says: "I believe it's important to challenge the assumption that support for my campaign is defined by who has time to email their council member or attend a public meeting." This dismissiveness toward people who took the time to email him or to speak at public meetings about his sexual harassment of a city staff member is astonishing.

As I mentioned in my own (May 18) letter to Mr. Watson, the 600-page report unequivocally supports the staff member's claims about sexual harassment. The pages of Mr. Watson's texts to the staff member are both obsessive and disturbing. The public has also been privy to Mr. Watson's ongoing antagonism toward staff in city council meetings, as he pulled consent calendar items only to berate people and flex his own ego.

He needs to resign.

'A Thought Experiment'

Editor:

Regarding Jerry Rohde's column "This Land is Their Land" in the Sept. 1 NCJ:

As a thought experiment, consider if those of us who are descended from colonists, settlers and immigrants stopped reproducing. Not impossible since birth control has been legal for over 50 years.

Then the indigenous American Indians could finally retake the continent in only two or three generations. After 500 years. Of course, all new immigration would have to end also.

Just a thought experiment.

Weeping for Our Climate

Mankind has a very real danger closing in on it: This danger is moving at a rate that is making a mockery of avoidance and denial. It is climate change (Mailbox, Sept. 1). Science, that purveyor of the magnificence through which civilization flourishes, also provides us with the methods and markers to gauge the degree and rate of this change. Despite occasional disagreements, 97 percent of climate scientists agree not only about the magnitude of the change, but about the consequences. And, most ominously, they agree this change is speeding up.

down, or be swept away by a flood, or for your water to be rationed, or to suffer 115-degree heat to accept that while we may not be able to stop this catastrophe, we must make substantial effort to mitigate what and where we can or our future will be "absolute global chaos."

It doesn't matter if mankind is a major driver of this change, or whether the change is a result of natural forces, there is evidence that we can mitigate its effects. Our ingenuity has never been inadequate to any task, but time is running out on this one.

Zoellner Case Lurches Toward Trial

District attorney's deposition draws controversy, may prompt delays

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

With a trial date approaching for a civil lawsuit Kyle Zoellner brought against the city of Arcata in the wake of his 2017 arrest, the recent deposition of Humboldt County District Attorney Maggie Fleming has become a point of contention, prompting Zoellner's attorneys to seek sanctions from the court as the city's lawyers accuse them of misrepresenting the record.

Zoellner, 28, filed a lawsuit in 2018, alleging police violated his civil rights when they arrested him April 14, 2017, at the scene of a house party off Alliance Road where 19-year-old Humboldt State University sophomore David Josiah Lawson had been fatally stabbed during a fight. Prosecutors alleged Zoellner stabbed Lawson multiple times during the last of several altercations that began after Zoellner's girlfriend, Lila Ortega, lost her cell phone.

In his lawsuit, Zoellner initially alleged police lacked probable cause to arrest him, denied him proper medical attention and defamed his character, though a judge later dismissed all those claims, leaving only an allegation that police instigated a malicious prosecution by filing a false report. Specifically, Zoellner's attorneys contend that former Arcata Police Department detective Eric Losey maliciously filed a false police report that erroneously stated a witness had identified Zoellner as Lawson's killer in order to get prosecutors to charge Zoellner with murder — a charge that was later dismissed by a local judge who found there wasn't enough evidence to support it. Lawson's killing remains unsolved.

After years of legal wrangling, the case is scheduled to go to trial Oct. 3 but it appears Fleming's Aug. 16 deposition may cause further delay.

At issue is Fleming's testimony about exactly what led her to charge Zoellner with murder. In an April 5, 2019, letter to the state Attorney General's Office asking it to take over the case, Fleming wrote that initial reports submitted to her office "indicated an eyewitness could identify the suspect" and her office "filed charges based on that information." But according to a filing from Zoellner's attorneys, Fleming's recollection about what led her to file a murder charge against Zoellner on April 19, 2017, has changed.

According to the attorneys, Fleming testified she did not yet have the police reports that erroneously stated a witness claimed to have seen the killing and instead filed the murder charge based on a different — but also inaccurate — report, this one stating an analysis of fibers located on a knife believed to be the murder weapon matched Zoellner's clothing.

But Zoellner's lead attorney Elizabeth Zareh contends her office has never received the referenced fiber report as a part of the civil discovery process, as the law would require. Zareh accuses the city's attorneys of "creating a trial by ambush" and "hiding" records.

Attorneys representing the city have yet to officially respond to Zareh's filing but notified her in an email they believe it made "statements and claims that are inconsistent with the testimony" and, as such, they were requesting a transcript of Fleming's deposition, which will be ready by Sept. 23.

If there is a "false fiber report," as Zareh contends Fleming's testimony indicates there may be, it would represent a startling turn in the case, which for months has focused on whether Losey acted with malicious intent when he admittedly filed a report with inaccurate information. Specifically, Losey's report indicated a witness who attended the house party — Jason Martinez — had told police he saw Lawson get stabbed and identified Zoellner as his assailant. Losey testified weeks later, at Zoellner's preliminary hearing, that he'd made "an error" when he wrote in his report that Martinez had identified Zoellner.

As detailed in a pre-trial order from Jacqueline Scott Corley, Zoellner's malicious prosecution allegation hinges on proving not simply that Losey's report was incorrect, but that Losey knew it was inaccurate and filed it anyway, acting with malice, and that the district attorney charged Zoellner with murder as a result. Fleming's testimony that she didn't have Losey's report at the time she charged Zoellner and was relying on an entirely different report would seemingly be a huge setback to the plaintiff's case.

Zareh points out Fleming's testimony appears inconsistent with the letter she sent to the attorney general, an email she sent a local reporter and comments she made to National Police Foundation investigators, all of which pointed to the Losey's erroneous report of an eyewitness as the reason Zoellner was charged with murder.

"She testified that her memory, five years after the fact, was better than the three exhibits listed above, including her own writings in 2019 and 2020 with respect to what she relied on to file charges."

— Attorney Elizabeth Zareh on the recent deposition of Humboldt County District Attorney Maggie Fleming

"[Fleming] testified further that the two correspondences that she drafted and the reference in [the National Police Foundation] report were a mistake on her part," Zareh writes. "She testified that she never took any steps to correct her alleged error. She testified that her memory, five years after the fact, was better than the three exhibits listed above, including her own writings in 2019 and 2020 with respect to what she relied on to file charges."

Potentially further muddying the waters, Fleming reportedly testified she does not know when her office received specific reports, saying her office does not date stamp reports as they come in or keep a log of what police submit to her office and when. Calling the reports "integral" to Zoellner's case, Zareh asks the court to compel the city to turn over any outstanding discovery documents — including the "false fiber report" and any logs documenting when reports were received by Fleming's office — as well as an order allowing "completion" of Fleming's deposition by Sept. 16.

Further contending that Fleming did not object to producing additional documents during her deposition and even agreed to use a file-sharing link provided by plaintiff's counsel, Zareh states the district attorney later refused to produce the records requested. She then changed her mind, according to Zareh, and agreed to produce them within a week before changing course again and refusing to turn them over. Zareh wrote that she informed Fleming she would seek sanctions if she continues to refuse to produce the records and, in her letter, the attorney states she is seeking sanctions in the amount of $15,000 from the court, noting her hourly rate of $750 and alleging she has spent 20 hours trying to "obtain the deposition and the records."

While Zoellner's civil case lurches toward trial more than five years after his arrest, the Arcata Police Department's investigation into Lawson's killing remains ongoing.

Last year, the city and Lawson's mother, Charmaine Lawson, agreed to settle a civil lawsuit she'd brought alleging that the city had violated her equal protection rights by inadequately and incompetently investigating her son's death, with racism and bias contributing to what the suit described as the city's "deliberately indifferent" policies and practices. Under the terms of the settlement, the city paid her $200,000, made a $25,000 donation to the David Josiah Lawson Memorial Scholarship fund and agreed to paint a memorial mural. While the settlement describes the pay-out as "compensatory damages," the city did not admit any wrongdoing.

Earlier this year, on the fifth anniversary of Lawson's death, Arcata Police Chief Brian Ahearn said additional witnesses to the killing will be needed to ultimately bring Lawson's killer to justice. There is physical evidence — including DNA analysis showing Lawson, Zoellner and two other unidentified people contributed to genetic material found on the knife at the crime scene — but Ahearn said he believes there are "gaps in the case" that need to be filled.

"We need witnesses to corroborate that physical evidence," Ahearn said, adding that he believes there are people who attended the party that night who saw something that could be of value to the investigation but have not yet come forward to speak with detectives.

He urged anyone who attended the party — even those who may have left hours before the stabbing — to contact APD's tip line at (707) 825-2590. ●

The Coastal Commission is Not the Enemy; Developers Flouting the Rules Are the Real Problem

By Jennifer Savage

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Sure, an 8,000-square-foot house sounds crazy to those of us who somehow managed to raise three children in humbler accommodations, but saying you wouldn't do something is always easier when that something isn't an option. If I had the money to build a mansion, maybe I would! But what I wouldn't do is choose to violate established laws designed to lessen its impact on the animals and plants or historical areas nearby.

Society generally holds that the people have the right to a healthy environment, and that our government is responsible for protecting this right on both public and private property. If you go to the park and find the trees chopped down, you might be bummed. If your neighbor's septic tank is leaching into the creek by your house, you might be even more bummed. When a developer breaks the rules, you may not personally see or feel the damaged landscape, but it exists nonetheless.

The government is supposed to try to prevent this stuff in the first place and to respond when these types of violations occur. That's why we have city councils, county supervisors, planning commissioners and, in the case of the state, the California Coastal Commission, whose job it is to explicitly ensure the Coastal Act is being upheld throughout the state. The Coastal Act is the law that says coastal lands should be protected. At the local level, Coastal Act concerns are represented through what's called a Local Coastal Program (LCP) that county and city officials are responsible for enforcing.

When our local officials fail to protect the general public interest, the Coastal Commission becomes the public's last line of defense in protecting our shared environment from being harmed. Unfortunately, some developers (and sometimes city and county staff) have successfully cast the Coastal Commission as something to be overcome.

Take recent conversations generated by Travis Schneider's building violations. Instead of asking, "Can Humboldt County Planning Commission staff find a path forward that will be agreeable to the California Coastal Commission?" More accurate questions would be, "Can Travis Schneider bring his currently illegal project into compliance with Humboldt County's Local Coastal Program?" or, "Can Schneider make up for the damage he's caused so far and finish building his giant home in a way that's legal and fair?" The Coastal Commission will only become involved if the Humboldt County Planning Commission fails to do its job of protecting our common interests by enforcing the law.

To summarize, Schneider veered from his original permit when he:

- Built his home in a different place than approved.
- Built his home closer to wetlands than he was supposed to.
- Bulldozed what's referred to as "environmentally sensitive habitat," an area where plants and animals are either rare or especially valuable to the ecosystem.
- Bulldozed over a Wiyot cultural site.
- Cut a road in an area he wasn't allowed to.
- Failed to get a required septic system permit before building.

If Schneider hadn't done all this illegal stuff, then his big ol' house would likely have been built by now and no one would have had to sit through hours of debate about what to do given the actual circumstances of his multiple violations. Tribal staff would not have had additional valuable time unnecessarily taken up. Tribal citizens would not have been subject to Planning Commission Chair Alan Bongio flinging out racist insults at the public meeting he was charged with running. And no one would have suffered through the classic strategies developers employ when opting to operate outside the law:

1. Getting far enough along in building that the discussion becomes about how to move forward with the now-mostly-built illegal development in place, therefore getting what they wanted all along;
2. Blaming permitting agencies for being "unwilling to compromise" to distract from the fact that what those agencies are actually doing is enforcing existing law;
3. Blaming permitting agencies for being "slow to respond" when those agencies are backlogged with problems created by developers and permit violations!
4. Parading character witnesses at public hearings as if willful violation of the law is somehow mitigated by folks swearing so-and-so is a great guy;
5. Creating a sense of urgency (i.e., winter storms!) to try to force through what normally wouldn't be allowed because now it's an "emergency."

This recent controversy isn't a question of Schneider's character but of how his actions intentionally deviated from his legal development permit. The path forward isn't about "appeasing" the Coastal Commission, but whether Schneider and the Humboldt County Planning Commission will fail to right the wrongs already done. If they continue on as they have been, the project very well may end up in front of the Coastal Commission, which is exactly where it would then belong.

Jennifer Savage (she/her) spent nearly six years testifying at California Coastal Commission meetings as Surfrider Foundation's California Policy Manager and has a deep appreciation for the Coastal Act.

Problems Plague CA School Data System, Putting Funding at Risk

The data management system for California's K-12 schools has been on the fritz for months after it was updated in April then rolled out with minimal testing, potentially jeopardizing school district funding.

The California Longitudinal Pupil Achievement Data System, or CALPADS, stores information for the state's 6 million public school students. It's how the state knows how many students have learning disabilities, are experiencing homelessness or qualify as English learners. The California Department of Education uses this demographic data to calculate how much funding will go to the state's more than 1,000 school districts. Districts with more high-needs students get more money based on that data.

While one department official said nearly all the state's schools will still get their full funding, the recent malfunctions have alarmed some district officials.

Earlier this year, the state's new software update generated reams of inaccurate data about students with disabilities, disrupting standardized testing. Leading up to the new school year, districts that usually might have a few dozen initial errors were seeing thousands when their data specialists uploaded student data into the statewide system. The errors included wrong enrollment numbers, duplicate student information and missing information about accommodations for students with disabilities. Administrators feared they would lose funding due to these inaccuracies.

"Some districts felt at the time they were going to lose funding because of no fault of their own," said Jeremy Davis, the assistant superintendent of innovation and instructional support at the Fullerton School District. "And it wasn't being clarified by the CDE."

Michael Fine is the chief executive officer of the Fiscal Crisis and Management Assistance Team, or FCMAT, a state agency that helps maintain the statewide data system. He said the rollout of the upgrade was "less than satisfactory and did not follow the expectations of the field or FCMAT."

"Simply put, my opinion is that long-standing protocols and best practices around system revisions and implementation were not followed with fidelity," Fine wrote in an email to CalMatters. He added that the education department chose to "streamline these processes" and take a "minimalist" approach to testing, which may have further complicated the rollout of an already complex system.

Fine added that not only did the upgraded data system launch with minimal testing, the department could have provided "greater transparency and more information" to districts.

The system upgrade, which both Fine and Davis said was much needed, compromised standardized testing at schools across the state.

For the last several months, Davis said data specialists at California's school districts have been frustrated by the bugs in the system. At the Fullerton School District, he said his data team members were seeing up to 10,000 errors when they uploaded information, where they would only see about a dozen in previous years. Davis said some districts had hundreds of thousands of errors before the department of education started addressing the issues.

"We just really want to make sure CALPADS is shored up," said Davis, who is also the president of California IT In Education, a nonprofit professional organization for technology workers in education. "We want CALPADS to have tons of funding. We want to lobby for them."

Malia Vella, a deputy superintendent at the California Department of Education, said about 98 percent of districts should be able to get all their data certified and secure their funding by the Sept. 16 deadline. Vella said the department is working with districts to address the errors and that California allows districts more time than other states to submit their data.

While Davis said he can't comment on the accuracy of the state's prediction, his own team of three data specialists at Fullerton school district will be able to meet the Sept. 16 deadline for districts to submit their data to the state. But he said even though his team and those at other districts are submitting correct data, the statewide system is still experiencing errors, like miscounting the number of students with disabilities, which could have repercussions for standardized testing.

"If students didn't get tested because of the glitches in the system ... That's a piece of data that helps us inform our instruction," Davis said. "If less kids are tested, there's a concern there."

The stakes for reliable data are higher than ever. The state needs to have a clear picture of student enrollment and achievement so it can allocate the necessary resources to help them recover academically, socially and emotionally from the pandemic's impact.

The information in the statewide system is the basis of accountability platforms like the California School Dashboard, which shows the public everything from enrollment figures to suspension rates at every school in the state. The problems with the data system started in April when the education department updated its software.

In May, the California School Boards Association and the Association of California School Administrators wrote an open letter to State Superintendent of Public Instruction Tony Thurmond detailing several issues with the data system. Among them, students with disabilities were not getting the accommodations they needed during standardized testing.

For the past several months, the education department has been fixing the errors. As of this week, there are still nearly 100 known issues with the data system. According to California Department of Education spokesperson Maria Clayton, the deadline for school districts to upload their student data was previously Sept. 9, but the department extended it due to school closures caused by "extreme heat and wildfires."

Clayton said the department has seven developer positions to run the statewide system, but these are part-time employees that equate to about three full-time staff. There are currently three additional open positions, two of which have been open since November.

"In my perception, the CALPADS team needs enough resources to make sure the system works really well," Davis said. "It's hard to find great programmers in the public sector, especially with tech companies offering work from home."

Davis said his data team is struggling with data errors while trying to manage other start-of-the-year responsibilities like adjusting student schedules, making sure all students are in the right classes and getting administrators the information they need for a smooth school year.

"Do we need to hire more teachers? Do we need to change classes?" Davis said. "The first weeks of school, you don't want to be doing CALPADS."

Interior Department Removes Derogatory Humboldt Place Names

The Department of the Interior announced Sept. 8 that replacement names have been approved for hundreds of valleys, streams, ridges, summits and other geographic features across the nation, including several in Humboldt County, that contained a derogatory word for Native women.

The final vote by the Board on Geographic Names — the federal body tasked with naming geographic places — marks the culmination of months of work by the Derogatory Geographic Names Task Force established by Interior Secretary Deb Haaland last year.

"I feel a deep obligation to use my platform to ensure that our public lands and waters are accessible and welcoming. That starts with removing racist and derogatory names that have graced federal locations for far too long," Haaland said in a news release. "I am grateful to the members of the Derogatory Geographic Names Task Force and the Board on Geographic Names for their efforts to prioritize this important work. Together, we are showing why representation matters and charting a path for an inclusive America."

According to the release, the task received more than 1,000 recommendations for name changes during its public comment period and several hundred more were brought forward after close to 70 tribal governments "participated in nation-to-nation" discussions.

The newly assigned names went into effect immediately, the department said.

The seven sites in Humboldt County — which run from the northern interior down to Southern Humboldt — are now called Panther Prairie, Pkwo'-o-lo 'ue-merkw, Spruce Grove Creek, Telegraph Creek, Grasshopper Creek, Grasshopper Creek Ridge and Tip Top Ridge Creek. (Check northcoastjournal.com for an entire list of locations and a map.)

But, as a July 17, 2015 Journal article notes, those were hardly the only offensive place names to be found in the area, including some named after participants in the 1860 massacre of mainly Wiyot women, children and elders at Tuluwat.

In a similar vein to the DOI's process, the State Parks and Recreation Commission voted unanimously last year to restore the name of

Sue-meg to Patrick's Point State Park (which referenced a man who once lived on the jutting peninsula and was known to have participated in the massacres of Native people, including children) to honor the designation used by the Yurok people for the area since time immemorial.

The Department of the Interior has undertaken similar efforts before, according to a previous release, including back in 1962 when then Secretary Stewart Udall identified the N-word as derogatory and in 1974 when the Board on Geographic Names eliminated the use a pejorative term for Japanese people.

The de-facto nuclear waste site on the edge of Humboldt Bay and one group’s efforts toward an atomic-ally correct future

By J.A. Savage
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Forty-four feet isn’t all that high. It’s halfway up the tall side of the county courthouse. If you stacked Guy Fieri seven-and-a-half times on top of himself, his platinum blond hair would reach 44 feet high. Forty-four feet is also the height above today’s sea level where 37 tons of radioactive waste from the former PG&E Humboldt Bay power plant is entombed in a concrete vault at the edge of the bay. A new coalition called, you guessed it, 44 Feet has brought together state agencies, federal and local political interests, scientists, a few folks with no titles at all and, to some extent, the nuclear plant’s owner, PG&E. Like nanoplastics and deep-fried butter, most of us do not want to think about radioactive waste stored nearby, but 44 Feet is trying to plan for its future safety, even if that future is 100,000 years away.

PG&E’s old nuclear power plant sat next to U.S. Highway 101 at King Salmon. It ran a brief and ignominiously leaky life from 1963 to 1976. Still, it produced high-level radioactive waste from the uranium fuel it used to create electricity. The radioactivity has cooled somewhat in the intervening years, but it will remain hot and toxic for more than 100,000 years.

The nuclear waste now sits astride Buhne Point, opposite the entrance to Humboldt Bay. It’s positioned in an area with three adjacent earthquake faults, encroaching sea level, potential tsunamis and general erosion. In fact, according to the California Coastal Commission, the area “has experienced one of the highest coastal erosion rates documented in the state.” It may be safe. But then again, “the bluff where the spent fuel sits used to be 96 feet above sea level in the 1800s, it’s now 44 feet above sea level,” said Jennifer Marlow, assistant professor in Cal Poly Humboldt’s Department of Environmental Science and Management and founder of 44 Feet (44feetabovesealevel.com).

If that’s such an awful location for storing highly toxic waste, you might be wondering, then why is it there? The waste remains near the old nuclear power plant because the federal government made a promise it couldn’t keep. A long-term storage facility for all the nation’s nuclear waste was supposed to be built in a geologically safer area, Yucca Mountain, Nevada. But it turned out Nevada didn’t want it and no one else has volunteered their own backyards, either. So far, the federal government has no feasible option and Humboldt’s radioactivity stays here, as the bureaucrats say, “in perpetuity.”

The federal bureaucracy, in the form of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, usurps almost all local and state authority over what happens in and around nuclear power plants. Anything that has to do with “health and safety” is firmly under the NRC. But, when the Humboldt nuke was officially deemed decommissioned last year — after nearly four decades of work and more than $1 billion in cost — the federal government packed up and headed back to headquarters. The NRC says there is no more need for concern because, according to an NRC spokesperson, “there is no accident scenario that would lead to a radiation release.” The feds will check in again in a few decades to review the storage site license, but that’s about it.

44 Feet is attempting to fill that void. “The gravity of the situation is important to address in this lifetime,” said Marlow. So far, the organization has brought together state agencies, PG&E (with a low profile), scientists and regular folk for two workshops to determine how long-term safety can be addressed in the absence of federal oversight and given local governments’ restrictions.

While getting the federal government’s attention, much less action, on nuclear waste safety is a daunting task, 44 Feet’s most recent workshop Aug. 26, included three county supervisors (Rex Bohn, Mike Wilson and Steve Madrone, representing the county’s First, Third and Fifth districts, respectively), a member of Rep. Jared Huffman’s staff, the Coastal Commission’s senior deputy director, representatives from Redwood Coast Energy Authority, the Humboldt Bay Harbor, Recreation and Conservation District, CalTrans, the Humboldt Community Services District, county planning, PG&E, environmentalists and academics.

The general premise of the gatherings so far has been that the safety of the radioactive waste depends on past assumptions and scientific data that no longer apply. 44 Feet participants contend that Humboldt Bay is, shall we say, fluid; change is inevitable and safeguards must be adaptive.

“As humans, we’re not very good at planning hundreds, thousands, of years in the future,” said Marlow. “So, we must maintain adaptability.” Meanwhile, federal regulators, and thus PG&E, contend that safety requirements based on old data are sufficient, hence the situation is under control.

Marlow concedes that “at this time we are as protected as we can be, but we haven’t figured out how tsunamis and earthquakes alter the status quo.” Perhaps, radioactivity will remain safe in the storage vault forever, but she’s not certain of it. Neither is Tom Marlow, Jennifer Marlow’s father and a former utility employee in the nuclear power industry. While he declares himself to be “a proponent of nuclear power,” he “maintain[s] a strong questioning attitude by challenging assumptions, shaped by understanding that accidents often result from a series of decisions and actions that reflect flawed assumptions,” and that the design of the canisters and vault holding the waste is the most important factor in preventing radioactive release.

“Three things keep me up at night,” he said during 44 Feet’s latest workshop. These are threats to the storage site’s design from earthquakes and tsunamis. The first faintly glowing sheep breaching his somnambulist fence is a tsunami. He said that a “large run-up tsunami after an earthquake” of greater magnitude than what PG&E has designed the storage for, could deposit sand and debris into the vault, which could “interrupt heat transfer” of the decaying spent fuel. If heat increases inside the canisters, it will increase pressure inside on stress welds and other weak spots, increasing the potential of leaks. Then, there’s the potential for a tsunami’s high velocity water to enter the storage through the drain piping and drains embedded in the bottom of each of the six vault cells. “It’s a pathway for water to get in, cause thermal stresses and compromise the [canisters’] integrity,” he said.

Finally, he ponders the stability of the bluff’s soil and resilience against a tsunami. He said that if soil is “scoured out from under the vault” and there’s soil liquefaction coupled with landsliding, the vault could tip over and, in a worse-case scenario, topple into the sea.

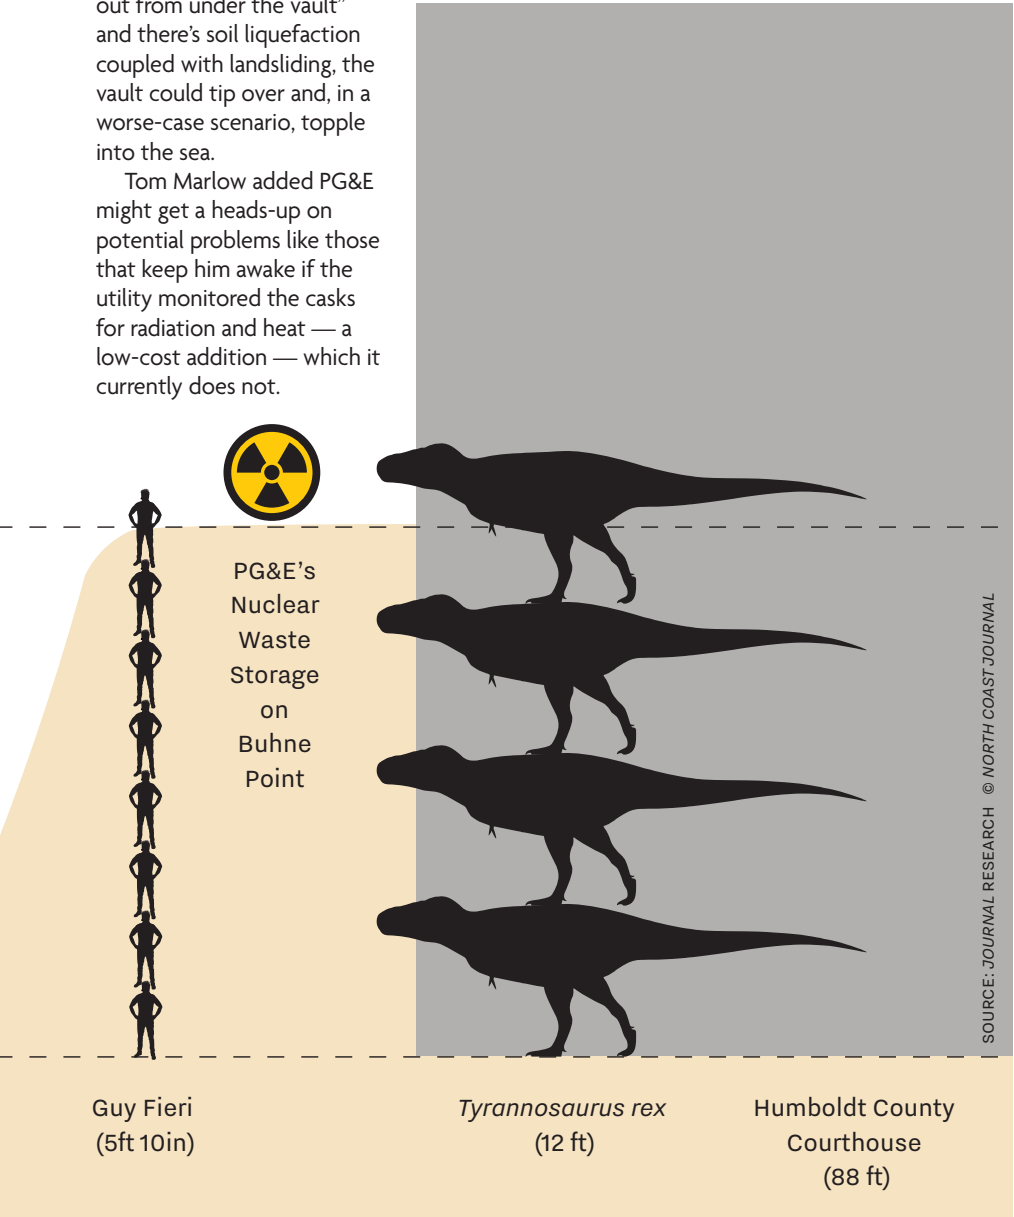

Tom Marlow added PG&E might get a heads-up on potential problems like those that keep him awake if the utility monitored the casks for radiation and heat — a low-cost addition — which it currently does not.

“There’s no safeguards to give forewarning if things go south,” he said. “They’re kinda flying blind.”

Monitoring, restoring heat transfer to keep the casks from stressing and retrieving a tipped over or toppled vault should be addressed in PG&E’s plans, he said.

He noted that PG&E and its consultants have spent thousands of hours of effort to engineer and fabricate 100s of canisters since the mid-1980s, construct the vault, and load and transport the fuel for storage — all without “any release of radioactivity.” But the site’s natural characteristics, along with the earthquake and tsunami threats, are “formidable.” He added, “Mother Nature has the proven potential to overwhelm well researched design assumptions. As my granddaughter lives only a few miles away in Eureka, I’m maintaining a questioning attitude in an effort to ensure Humboldt Bay’s is not the first” to defy design assumptions and fail.

Of course, it's possible none of those more extreme, sudden catastrophes will happen, and the real danger could simply be the inexorable rise of the ocean. "We've seen 20 inches of sea level rise since 1970," said Craig Benson, a Cal Poly Humboldt Ecological Restoration and Environmental Conflict Resolution lecturer. "We can't stop hazards like earthquakes but how do we deal with sea-level rise? If you like drinking at Redwood Curtain Brewery in Arcata, that'll be gone. What will be stable 5,000 years from now" when the radioactivity remains toxic?

PG&E relies on data that determined, in 2005, that sea-level rise will be negated by upthrust from earthquakes around Humboldt Bay, so, according to the utility, your beer is unlikely to drown and the coastline will stay pretty much where it is. That report, "Implications of Long-Term Global Warming and Tectonic Displacements at Buhne Hill, Humboldt County, California," reads, "The rate of interseismic uplift at Buhne Point will keep up with expected sea level rise." When asked if that data still stands, Alison Talbott, PG&E's local spokesperson who attended the 44 Feet workshop, declined to answer.

Clearly, no one at 44 Feet thinks sea-level rise at Humboldt Bay will be a wash between upthrusts and sinking and higher water. The easy, short-term fix, according to some at the workshop, is rocks. Some advocate "armoring" the bluff with more rip rap as a relatively low-cost bulwark against whatever nature has in store during our lifetime. Or there could be a more natural alternative available with a little more investigation, noted Jennifer Kalt, director of Humboldt Baykeeper. CalTrans, for instance, is using rocks to shore up U.S. Highway 101 but also uses plants to "armor" the freeway.

It's not as straightforward as rip rap and willows, according to Kate Huckelbridge, California Coastal Commission senior deputy director. She said before the first stone is placed, it's important to know what the rock is protecting against and design accordingly. "If protection is warranted, you have to make sure you have the appropriate design," she said. "It may not be the right solution to just put a bunch of rock there."

The Coastal Commission is a key player in moving post-decommissioning policy in California because the state did preserve its right to regulate what goes on around the storage site through the commission. Californians can also manage finances through the California Public Utilities Commission, like requiring PG&E to do studies paid for by its customers.

Wilson, Humboldt County's Third District Supervisor, is also a coastal commissioner, and he's been following what 44 Feet is up to. Up until the federal government declared all is well at the former nuclear plant when decommissioning was completed in November of 2021, the Coastal Commission was relegated to building permits for the power plant's roads and outbuildings. The U.S. Supreme Court has allowed states vast leeway to control health and safety within their borders — but not with nuclear power. Now that the NRC has stepped away from regulating, Humboldt has a backdoor. The Coastal Commission can keep that door propped open by regulating the hell out of the permitting process. In so doing, it is looking to address at least some safety issues from the structures, erosion and other physical surroundings shoring up the radioactive waste site. It appears the commission is looking to take an active role. "We have to do everything we can to prepare and push for removal, and at the same time we have to protect what's in place," Huckelbridge said.

That raises the question: Should the radioactive waste stay here on the edge of the bay or should it go somewhere — anywhere — else. Anywhere with a more stable geologic structure, that is. The 44 Feet group wants clear direction for that well before 2032, when the federal Department of Energy expects to start either retrieving or writing off spent nuclear waste from 14 of the first shut-down sites around the country.

The Coastal Commission may want it gone but "there's no such a place as 'away,'" Kalt notes. "I've long felt that, ethically, any toxic industry needs to be built with the understanding that the toxic waste cannot be moved somewhere else. And in this case, moving the waste would be really risky, whether it's moved by sea or by road."

If You Go:

What: Humboldt Bay Challenges and Opportunities, a public discussion that will come as part of the Which Way the Wind Festival featuring 44 Feet

When: Oct. 13 at 7 p.m.

Where: Synopsis, 1675 Union St., Eureka

In that direction, 44 Feet is looking for new data to determine whether moving the radioactive waste will be possible a decade from now. PG&E, for instance, has a cask transporter but it resides at the Diablo Canyon nuclear plant near San Luis Obispo. Questions like the future ability and wherewithal to barge out waste canisters if roadways are permanently flooded have yet to be addressed.

Dealing with Humboldt's decommissioning experience and the lack of federal post-decommission health and safety policy can be a useful lesson for other closed or soon-to-shut-down nuclear plants. Gov. Gavin Newsom's plan to extend the life of the Diablo Canyon nuclear was signed into law in early September. The two reactors were supposed to begin shutting down in 2025. The state expects to offer PG&E, Diablo Canyon's owner, a $1.4 billion loan to shore up the plant. That loan is marked as "forgivable," meaning the state would "forgive" PG&E if the utility does not pay back the money. PG&E is also in line to receive billions of dollars more from the federal government to prolong the life of, and waste from, Diablo Canyon.

In addition to the state's highly controversial move, the federal government must still approve the nuclear plant's license extension. That appears likely, given the history of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's unwavering support for the industry. At 2,200 megawatts (more than 30 times more powerful than Humboldt's nuclear plant), Diablo has produced far more radioactive waste than Humboldt's nuke since it went on-line in 1985. And that waste will also have no where else to go but the shaky California coastline for storage.

Meanwhile, local electricity provider

Redwood Coast Energy Authority issued requests to contract for replacement energy from the Diablo plant.

While nuclear power remains contentious in California, and the health and safety threat to the public is still debated in policy and budgeting, those backing the 44 Feet project know they've got a lot of convincing to do before the issue of coastal storage becomes a policy priority. The specter of radioactive contamination that may happen with an earthquake tomorrow or corrosion far, far, far in the future is contending with issues that are urgent and undeniable and ghastly. But, face it, having that radioactive waste hanging over the edge of the Pacific Ocean is more than an amorphous annoyance.

Humboldt's nuclear waste is one of the most toxic substances on earth. On a basic physiology level, when radioactivity is absorbed by a body, the radioactivity becomes part of living tissue. Those deadly, invisible, isotopes are what escaped at Chernobyl in 1986 and Fukushima Daiichi in 2011. Radiation can be breathed in, swallowed or assimilated just by exposing some skin. It doesn't just infiltrate humans, it starts killing every living thing it touches, like marine and plant life. Reportedly, cockroaches are the only ones immune. It's a very bad thing, indeed, but it's not yet today's bad thing.

"The planet is decaying before our eyes," conceded Jennifer Marlow. "Inflation. Water. Food. And yet this coalition of scientists, bureaucrats, academics and others think they might make life on this planet and Humboldt Bay safer for thousands of years into the future. We're not nuclear physicists, but we have the capacity to ask the question, 'How to keep the site safe?' although it's not morally clear what you owe the future." ●

End-of-Summer Joy and Goat Cheese

by Simona Carini

onthetable@northcoastjournal.com

When I turn the wall calendar to the September page, I go into denial about the approaching end of summer. At the farmers market, I continue purchasing summer produce until the last day it's available.

Preserving produce also helps keep summer alive in the kitchen. For example, in the recipe I am sharing here, the two vegetable ingredients — eggplant and tomatoes — can be frozen after roasting, so you can prepare the dish in the middle of winter, when a reminder of warmer, longer days is welcome.

The third ingredient is cheese, two types of it to be precise, one being fresh chèvre. Given its versatility, a disk of Cypress Grove's fresh goat milk cheese is a trusted presence in my refrigerator. Recently, I was invited to try two new flavors of the cheese, Meyer Lemon and Honey and the limited edition Hatch Chile, and, with samples provided by the local company, I went on a little creative journey with them.

Meyer lemon and alfalfa honey provide a bright, sweet note to the tangy cheese, while flame-roasted Hatch green chiles give the other variety an earthy, mildly spiced flavor. The flavors are well balanced, giving each cheese a charming personality. You can enjoy them au naturel on bread or crackers as appetizer or for a snack (remember to take the cheese out of the refrigerator an hour before eating) or add it to dishes.

There are also serving suggestions on the Cypress Grove's website (cypressgrovecheese.com), but here are a trio of other ideas I tested with excellent results:

Dress a pound of steamed green beans with vinaigrette and toss. Add a peach, peeled and cut into bite-sized pieces, and some crumbled Meyer Lemon and Honey cheese. Toss again and enjoy. Serves 3 to 4 as a side dish, but I confess I cleaned the bowl all by myself.

As delicious dessert for two, I baked an Asian pear, halved and cored, for 20 minutes at 400 F, cut side up, then put a dollop of the Meyer Lemon and Honey cheese in the hollow and let it warm before serving. I am waiting for persimmon season to start to further experiment with fruit.

If you have leftovers of the Roasted Eggplant, Zucchini and Tomato in my last column ("Farmers Markets, Summer Produce and Joy," July 22), warm them up, then dot the surface with some crumbled Hatch Chile cheese and mix it in. Serve immediately.

Roasted Eggplant and Tomatoes with Cheese

You can roast the vegetables a day or two ahead and store them in separate airtight containers until you're ready to use them, or you can freeze and thaw them before assembling the dish on a day you feel the need to taste summer. Serves 4.

Ingredients:

1 ½ pounds eggplant, Italian, globe or Listada de Gandia (aka, graffiti eggplant)
Extra-virgin olive oil
1 ¼ pounds small tomatoes, about 1 ½ inches in diameter, Early Girl or similar variety
1 tablespoon minced fresh herbs (thyme, winter savory, basil)
Fine sea salt
2 ounces fresh goat cheese such as Cypress Grove Hatch Chile or Ms. Natural, crumbled and divided

½ ounce freshly grated sweet cheddar or Gouda

Heat the oven to 400 F. Line two baking sheets with silicone baking mat or parchment paper.

Trim the top and bottom of the eggplant, then cut crosswise into ½-inch thick slices. Drizzle some olive oil over the slices and toss them with your hands to distribute. Place the slices, spacing them about 1 inch apart on the prepared baking sheets.

Place the baking sheets in the oven next to each other or on racks above each other. Roast for 20 minutes. Take the baking sheets out of the oven and flip the eggplant slices using a fork. Put the baking sheets back in the oven (if they are on different racks, switch their positions). Roast for another 10 minutes. Remove the eggplant and transfer it onto a large plate.

Next, roast the tomatoes. Heat the oven to 350 F. Line a baking sheet with a silicone baking mat or parchment paper.

Cut the tomatoes in half horizontally and place the top and bottom halves on the prepared sheet, cut side up. Drizzle them with some olive oil and sprinkle on the minced herbs.

Roast for 30 minutes on the center rack. Remove from the oven and let the tomatoes cool for a few minutes before gently transferring them onto a plate.

Heat the oven to 350 F. Assemble the dish in a 7 ½-inch soufflé dish. Distribute ⅓ of the eggplant slices on the bottom of the soufflé dish to form the first layer. Sprinkle with a pinch of fine sea salt. Place ⅓ of the tomatoes on top of the eggplant slices. Dot the tomatoes with ⅓ of the goat cheese. Repeat to make the second layer.

Lay down the final layer of eggplant and sprinkle it with a pinch of fine sea salt before topping with the last ⅓ of the tomatoes. Pour the liquid from the tomato plate over the layered vegetables. Sprinkle the grated cheese on the tomatoes.

Place the soufflé dish in the oven on the center rack and bake for 30 minutes.

Take the soufflé dish out of the oven and let the vegetables rest for a few minutes before cutting and serving.

Where the Party's At

Jesse Wiedel's Seven Day Weekend at Synapsis

By L. L. Kessner

In our third hour at Toni's restaurant the other night, I told my three friends, each visiting the North Coast for the first time from a different city, about the art show we were going to see the next day. "The work depicts a kind of psychedelic homelessness," I said. My comrades all laughed at me then, responding, it seemed, to my description of the work — as though this quality were a well-defined construct, as though they should know what I meant.

The artist, Humboldt's well-loved painter Jesse Wiedel, told me later that he aims to represent characters who are celebrating, but for whom the celebration has gone on too long, characters with a look like "Iggy Pop or Keith Richards," he said. As its title promises, the works in his exhibition Seven Day Weekend, now in an extended run at Synapsis performance space in Eureka (1675 Union St.), present many deeply engaging and curious scenes of protracted and perhaps misguided jubilation.

My friends and I were greeted in the entryway of the show by Synapsis' Leslie Castellano and by a couple of small portraits that operated as slightly grotesque icon paintings. Wiedel's style makes skin look a little cooked. Some of the bodies' interior tissues seem to have melted onto the surface and faces are often contorted. His art historical influences — Otto Dix, George Gross, and the Ashcan Painters — show up in his subjects, integrated and formulated into a unique figuration that is a little playful, equally captivating and repulsive. While we viewed the paintings, Castellano remarked that the figures often defy gravity, sometimes as if they are just breaking free from it. Her insight made me aware that I was mostly looking beyond the figures, focusing instead on the setting of the narratives, the painterly context of Wiedel's scenes. I was particularly transfixed by his skies, which are often rendered with softly blended pastels, containing puffy clouds that are sometimes heavy-bodied paint applied with a knife. Many of the clouds have a quality of expectation, like a gathering storm, but they are also pretty in a way that contrasts the grit of the narrative imagery and gives the pictures an exultant note.

In our conversation, Wiedel noted his work's relationship to genre painting, an art historical category of painting that depicts ordinary people doing ordinary things. While he sometimes uses photographs of famous individuals as references for the persons in his paintings, their identity is removed so the quality is what remains, subsumed into an anonymous prostrate naked guy or bikinied bike rider. Wiedel wants viewers to be able to construct their own stories about what is going on in the images. There are tensions in the work between specificity and commonality, sublimity and banality, and all levels of access to information and backstory. The overall result is an intriguing ambiguity that invites the viewer into the scene, but at a distance. It's a kind of neutrality that invites interest and examination without veering to either pole of judgement or idealism.

Synapsis, the setting of Seven Day Weekend, is multi-use performance space — not at all a white cube gallery. Wiedel's paintings hang amid aerial dance equipment, a permanent ceiling mural and pew benches pushed up against the walls. Wiedel said he enjoys the opportunity to show his paintings in this context and to connect with audiences who may not ordinarily get to see his work. All the pieces in the show were made since the beginning of the pandemic, some originally intended for a postponed exhibition elsewhere, and several influenced by a trip to Reno to gather references and inspiration. In a true-crime story that could be a narrative in one of Wiedel's paintings, one of his original works in Seven Day Weekend was stolen right off the wall during its opening night and remains at large.

The first image to catch my attention as I entered the main room was an ecstatic, symmetrical presentation of mirrored, long-haired figures shown from behind, flinging themselves rapturously upward before a distant brown butte. The landscape is based on the Amboy Crater in Southern California and offers up a concealed rock 'n' roll pun. The painting's figures are based on rotated images of Ted Nugent, who was once in a band called The Amboy Dukes.

"Ho-Hum," named for a Reno motel depicted in the image, stood out next because its composition is distinct from the other images in the show. It features a reclining woman's face huge in foreground, decapitated by the painting's frame. This character, too, has musical roots, adapted from an image of Velvet Underground singer, Nico.

Wiedel said he makes his decisions for combining buildings and characters and vehicles from different places and contexts based on aesthetic factors. In "Olga," he places a boarded-up trailer from Old Arcata Road alongside an intriguing sign he saw on the way to Reno. With them, he crafts a scenario in which something important is unknown to the viewer, behind a field of rocks and guarded by wheeling sentinels.

Driving to work a couple of days after seeing Seven Day Weekend, I turned from State Route 299 onto 96 and witnessed two figures crossing the road in handmade, belted white robes. One was tall, the other short, and their costumes recalled my Catholic grade-school class dressed up as saints for a parade on All Saints Day. One carried a staff with a banner I couldn't read and, as they moved along the edge of the small strip mall at 7:30 a.m. on this Monday morning, I thought: They could be in one of Jesse's paintings! I wondered for a moment about what exactly was going on there. I wanted to know what the story was. But then again, I thought, Do I, really? Maybe the potentiality, the possible explanations, the witnessing of the absurdity without knowing the full reality of how it came to be is actually where it's at.

Appointments can be made to view Seven Day Weekend through the Synapsis website, synapsisperformance.com. L.L. Kessner is an Arcata-based artist and writer.

A Day's Drive to 10 Beautiful Places

By Barry Evans
getout@northcoastjournal.com

My wife, Louisa Rogers, and I offer what has become a popular class through the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute (OLLI), Cal Poly Humboldt's continuing education program for learners aged 50 and better. It's so popular that our recommendations for "destinations that lie easily within a day's drive" have made it into print, right here. (Note: You don't have to be 50+ to participate in this article.) Visit northcoastjournal.com to find links and read more about some of these destinations.

Pepperwood Trails. Distance from Eureka: 37 miles

The Grieg-French-Bell Grove Trail and the Drury-Chaney Loop both have lush layers of redwood sorrel beneath old growth redwoods, creating the impression of a green carpet on the forest floor. The area is often used for movies and TV commercials ("Dawn Redwoods: Alive and Kicking," Feb. 2, 2017).

Dyerville Distance from Eureka: 50 miles

This settlement once had its own post office (1890-1933), stagecoach stop, service center and crossroads town. It was built on the Sinkyone village of Ltcunt dun and, in 1870, was one terminus of a ferry across the Eel River. The town was virtually wiped out by the flood of 1955, while Caltrans completed the job of building U.S. Highway 101. Just upstream is the Northwestern Pacific Railroad bridge, erected in 1910 and rebuilt following the December of 1964 flood ("The Rise of Dyerville," Jan. 16, 2014).

Usal Beach + Candelabra Trees. Distance from Eureka: 110 miles

Usal, the southern access to the Lost Coast, is a remote, sandy beach in Northern Mendocino County within the Sinkyone Wilderness, with a resident herd of Roosevelt elk. A recently opened trail from the beach features "candelabra" redwood trees: multiple twisted trunks that formed when coastal winds blew the tops off, bending new growth ("Candelabra Trees," Oct. 13, 2016)

Sinkyone Wilderness. Distance from Eureka to Visitor Center: 91 miles (4WD recommended to Needle Rock Visitor Center from Usal Road)

The Sinkyone Wilderness is a mostly shady temperate rainforest where you can take a 5-mile walk to the former logging town of Wheeler. The Needle Rock Visitor Center is a former ranch house. The Sinkyone is also the site of a massacre of Indians in the 1860s ("Exploring the Sinkyone Wilderness," Nov. 15, 2018).

Loleta Tunnel. Distance from Eureka: 14 miles

In 1884, the Loleta tunnel bypassed Table Bluff and made it much easier for Eel River loggers to transport logs to Humboldt Bay. It's a fun walk through the tunnel, requiring boots and flashlights. Currently, the far (northeast) portal is waterlogged ("The Loleta Tunnel," Feb. 14, 2013).

Lost Coast Headlands. Distance from Eureka: 25 miles

These wild and windswept coastal bluffs, 6 miles west of Ferndale, boast hills, grasslands, the occasional farm and two parking areas, about 3 miles apart, from where you can take two 20-minute walks down to the Pacific beaches.

Yurok Trail Loop and Hidden Beach.

Distance from Eureka: 70 miles

The Yurok Loop is a gentle, short hike that starts at Lagoon Creek Rest Area on U.S. Highway 101 north. Walk through a Sitka spruce forest and along a portion of the California Coastal Trail, with fine views of the rugged coast. Turn off the trail to visit Hidden Beach, a small cove beach with huge rocks in the surf and driftwood ("Along the Historic Yurok Loop," Sept. 8, 2022).

Black, Green and Red Lassic. Distance from Eureka: 83 miles

Looking like volcanoes (but they're not!), the three Lassic Peaks are easy to climb. (Louisa may claim otherwise for one of them.) The peaks are intimately linked to the tragic history of the Lassic Tribe ("Lassic Peaks, Lassic Band," June 16, 2016).

Rogue River Bridge. Distance from Eureka: 136 miles

Built in 1932 using a revolutionary French system of building in reinforced concrete, the seven-arch bridge is beautiful to look at, especially from the pathway south of the jetboat terminal in Gold River ("Crossing the Rogue," Aug. 15, 2013).

Redwood sorrel (Oxalis oregana) covers the forest floor of the Grieg-French-Bell Grove, just 30 minutes south of Eureka.

Schoolhouse Peak. Distance from Eureka: 61 miles

At 3,092 feet, this peak is the highest point in Redwood National Park. It has a fire lookout (occupied only in the summer months), with awesome views of meadows, oak trees, grasslands and — if you're lucky — the Pacific. Find it 18 miles east of U.S. Highway 101 on Bald Hills Road in Orick.

Barry Evans (he/him, barryevans9@yahoo.com) wonders what saintly things he did in a previous life to end up here in Humboldt.

Wide Variety of Tuna Caught off the Coast

By Kenny Priest

fishing@northcoastjournal.com

There is some absolutely insane offshore fishing happening right now off the Northern California coast. From Fort Bragg to Crescent City, the albacore bite has been wide-open. But that's just part of the story. What has everyone talking is the number of exotic, warm water species. Fort Bragg has seen the widest variety. A wide-open albacore bite on Sunday afternoon 30 miles offshore quickly turned into a tuna frenzy as thousands of 100- to 300-pound bluefin, bigeye and yellowfin tuna made an appearance. Several bluefins were hooked, but the under-gunned anglers didn't stand much of a chance in landing one of those bruisers. However, there were quite a few bigeyes up to 160-pounds landed. Shelter Cove also got in on the exotic action as a 151-pound yellowfin tuna was landed on Sunday. The lucky boat had several others hooked but anglers were unable to coax them to the boat. Simultaneously, a nice size Dorado was landed right next to the boat fighting the yellowfin. You can't make this stuff up. Closer to home, both Eureka and Crescent City have seen epic albacore action the last few days. Marc Schmidt of Coastline Charters boated 52 albies Sunday fishing 43 southwest of the entrance. The fish are big, too, sporting a solid 20-pound average. Out of Crescent City, one of the charter boats landed 40 albacore on Monday roughly 50 miles offshore. Weather and ocean conditions look favorable for the next few days. I, for one, can't wait to see what the next warm-water surprise will be.

The Oceans: Eureka

With the warm water within reach and flat calm seas, the Eureka fleet is focused on tuna. Boats did well Sunday 45 miles southwest from the entrance on big albacore. The weather wasn't as good Monday, but a few boats made the trip. Supposedly the high boat landed 18. The forecast for the next couple days looks good, and the warm water currently off Cape Mendocino is making its way north towards Eureka.

Shelter Cove

According to Jake Mitchell of Sea Hawk Sport Fishing, boats that ran for tuna on Sunday did well. "Scores ranged from 5 to 20 fish, but they were all a good grade," said Mitchell. "Most of the effort was around the Vizcaino Knoll. The rockfish bite is still great, but the lings are still tougher to come by. We've been spending most of our days at the Ranch House."

Crescent City

Tuna is the main focus at the moment out of Crescent City. A few boats went out Sunday roughly 36 miles, with the top boat landing 14 big albacore along with a 42-inch Dorado. Monday, one of the local charters put in 40 tuna 50 miles offshore and a private boat had 12, all between 25 and 35 pounds along with a Dorado. According to Britt Carson of Crescent City's Englund Marine, quite a few boats made the run on Tuesday and are catching all they can handle.

The Rivers: Lower Klamath

Flows are still high, roughly 3,600 cubic feet per second on the lower Klamath gauge as of Tuesday. The releases from Iron Gate arrived on the lower river Monday and it quickly muddied up. It is starting to clear but will take some time. There is a mix of jacks and adult salmon in the river and a few steelhead as well. As a reminder, the lower river quota has been met and salmon longer than 23 inches must be released. Your adult Chinook releases need to be recorded on your North Coast Salmon Report Card as normal. The bag limit is two salmon less than or equal to 23 inches and two hatchery steelhead.

Chetco/Lower Rogue

A few salmon a day are being caught in the Chetco estuary, with some of the kings topping 30 pounds, reports Martin. "Monday was the best day so far this season, with more than a dozen salmon landed. Anglers targeting bottom fish closer to the harbor also are encountering salmon, a sign bigger numbers of kings are staging just out from the jetties. Salmon fishing also remains good in the Rogue Bay, with a few coho showing up and plenty of kings. Lots of jacks also are showing in the catch." ●

The Cat Would Like You to Stop Being So Divisive

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

Shutterstock

Well, well, well. Once again, I reach out to you and I'm met with verbal abuse, blame and violence. It's like I can't even extend a paw and drag a single litter-dusted claw along the vein of your forearm without hysterics over "a deep gash," "arteries" and what might get "infected." I see your arm is working well enough to use the spray bottle, though.

This is exactly what I wanted to talk to you about before you flipped out. What this household needs, especially when we're all rattled by the recent attack on the stupid bird, is unity. We need to come together as a family and heal, but you would rather cause more division. You would rather point fingers over who supposedly leapt from the bookcase and knocked the stupid cage down, or who came home from an alleged date to find who allegedly crouching atop the cage, reaching through the bars and batting at the stupid, cornered parakeet. It's sad.

Does it really matter which one of us dragged the bottom of that rotisserie chicken container out of the garbage and under the sofa to enjoy in peace? I could point out how rarely you vacuum under there, or how your useless human nose didn't pick up the tang of rotting chicken juice for a week and even your date took like 20 minutes to zero in on the source. But I'm not about pitting members of this household against one another. I'm better than that.

It could have just as easily been me tripping over you when you were crouched in the shadow of the steps until you sprang out, howling. But I'm pretty sure I wouldn't have been so operatic about it, laying by the door and moaning until that passing UPS driver heard it and called an ambulance. I definitely would not have milked that limp for weeks. Honestly, if I wasn't able to land on my feet, I wouldn't go around advertising it.

I don't like to victim blame but the animosity and lack of trust in this home is your fault. Clinging to old complaints from last night is a bad look for you — for all of us, really. We have a lot to be proud of and we could enjoy it — even invite guests who bring and drop food! — if you'd stop dwelling on differences and disagreements. And stop bleeding on everything. That pillow is ruined.

You're constantly sowing division, trying to paint a third of the members of this household as "destructive" simply because we've smashed a few tacky tchotchkes and barely swiped a feather from the stupid parakeet that was really pressed into that back corner just out of reach. Instead of coming together, you attack us with cruel labels and the spray bottle until we have to retreat under the side of the couch that doesn't smell like rotting chicken.

Take for example when you made a big deal of apologizing to your date for the "cat shit" in their shoe. First of all, why is it so important to say it's from a cat? What point were you trying to make there? Can you even prove it was from a cat? Because as I recall, you didn't have a clear view of the shoe rack for the whole night. You have no idea what went on in the living room when you were looking for air freshener under the sink to cover the rotten chicken smell. You didn't even question your date. No, of course not. You just assumed it was the cat. Typical.

I don't even know why you made such a fuss. It's not like anybody you bring here ever comes back. And your vulgarity about it was the real turnoff, the real crime. Do you even hear how disgusting you sound? "The cat shit in the plants again," "There's cat shit in the shower," "How the hell did cat shit get in the fridge?" It's crude. And frankly, it's weird how often you bring it up.

You need to think about how you can bring us together instead of splitting us apart. Stop playing the victim and work on solutions, like crawling on your hands and knees to sweep the room for rotting food every day. Be more positive and lift others up — maybe say something nice about how sharp I've kept my claws. That is a clean slice right there.

Speaking of which, the bleeding finally seems to be slowing. See? That's something to focus on. Be proud of your resilience.

Clair de Lune

By Collin Yeo
music@northcoastjournal.com

Well, this was quite a weekend, let me tell you. Apparently there was something called a Pisces Moon on Saturday, which is supposed to turn people like myself who have a birthday between Feb. 19 and March 20 into wicked and fantastic werewolves. Or so I am told; honestly I'm so checked out on the calendar I thought the flags everywhere were at half mast because Queen Elizabeth II died and not because of 9/11. Whether you want to believe the astrological implications behind the machinations of the sky, it's fairly impossible to deny the rude and brute power of a full moon, whose effects seem to be felt by nearly every living thing on this planet, plus a few rudimentary physical forces. The material world hums and sighs under the light and pressure of a big moon, even that container ship that got stuck in the Suez Canal in March of 2021 was dislodged in part because of its influence on the king tide.

I prefer to think about moonlight more than moon energy, as I have an old, romantic notion about the stuff (I can't get enough of it) and I've never been sorry to see it. In "The Twilight Woods" by the American weird fiction author and poet Clark Ashton Smith, he tells us, "Here darkening twilight is a sorcery." That's how I feel about moonlight, only without the negative connotations. There's only pure magic in the stuff and I look forward to its monthly iterations.

Enjoy the nightlife.

Thursday

Some things exist in the live music world as little indicators, signs of life in the musical ecosystem. One of the more reliable of these sonic semaphores is the robustness of a road dog's touring schedule. Some folks out there are like Roger Miller's mythical King of the Road, addicted to the allure of playing their tunes in front of new faces every night. They tend to be eccentric, sui generis types, never designed for mass production. Boutique people. And their music is generally compelling. One such character is Tom Boylan, aka Holus Bolus, a one-man band whose acoustic guitar, loops, vocals and percussion runs form a fun and "big little sound." Check him out today at the Myrtle town edition of Redwood Curtain Brewing Co. for a free gig at 6 p.m.

Friday

Many of you are more than familiar with my political alignment and the sometimes graceless way in which I promote it. But believe me when I tell you I have nothing on the hosts of a brilliant podcast called The Dollop, where socialist comedian Dave Anthony tells a fucked up story from American history to his witty and better-natured friend Gareth Reynolds, who is famously coming into the experience completely cold, with no prior knowledge of the topic. What follows is usually an excellent discussion about our brutal past (and present), with a wild incredulity coming across through the humor. The latter gentleman is bringing his formidable stand-up work to Savage Henry Comedy Club, tonight and tomorrow night at 9 p.m. ($20). Come and hear stories about his English mum, his cat Jose, and life in general. Just don't call him Gary.

Saturday

I am told by my buddy Red, aka DJ Red, that Soul Party at Humbrews tonight at 9 p.m. ($5), is the official afterparty for the North Country Fair, and that anyone who participated in the All Species Parade is welcome to wear their critter duds on the dancefloor. What more do you need to know, other than that the other regular DJs, Funky T-Rex, Philly Fresh and King Maxwell will also be holding court? I'll be out of town at a wedding, so try to have some fun for me, please.

Sunday

Day two of the North Country Fair today, with an appearance on the plaza of a certain two-decade-plus freak-rock act called Datura Blues at 2:30 p.m., a multi-state, long term side project of local music fiend Oryan Peterson-Jones. I hear tell that the rhythm section will even feature two former dudes who used to jam with local psyche-rock monument White Manna, one of whom looks a little like me. (Editor's note: It's totally Collin.)

I've been wanting to write more about Metal Mondays over at Savage Henry but the promoter is a tad on the elusive side. Eric, if you are reading this, please hit me up, I like what you are doing. Thankfully, I was able to score a flier for tonight's 7 p.m. show, which is a multinational headbanger, featuring powerviolence band Noose Sweat from Vancouver, B.C., grindcore act Knoll from Tennessee, and two local groups, doom band Death Doula and the debut show of my friend Darren's band Psyop Victim. Darren's been shredding in Humco for years, and his CV is a who's who of solid metal acts, so definitely come out for this one if you are a metal maniac ($10).

Tuesday

I got a nice email from Jerry Martien over the weekend, a man I've known through my maternal uncle since I was a wee lad. He wanted to tell me about his upcoming reading at the Arcata Playhouse tonight at 7 p.m. but was perhaps a little reticent because the setlist is, at least nominally, about live music. Well, my friend, I assure you that there's always room for you in this column and it sounds like there will be musical accompaniment to your work, courtesy of Fred Neighbor, Mike LaBolle and Gary Richardson. To those unaware of Martien's work, I can assure you he is the real deal, with a pile of chapbooks and musings about this corner of the planet that are nothing short of a treasure. Consider coming through ($15).

Wednesday

Singer/songwriter Sean Hayes is a veteran of the touring life, a folksy and soulful chap who has a modern take on the idiom of acoustically centered, indie music. Tonight at 8 p.m., you can find the troubadour at Humbrews, reaching into his two decades-plus long songbook to entertain the fans ($20). ●

Collin Yeo (he/him) would like to say RIP to PnB Rock, shot in Los Angeles on Monday. Too many young rappers are getting killed lately, which is heartbreaking.

Nosferatu.

This year marks the 100th anniversary of the silent cinema masterpiece Nosferatu and to honor it, the Eureka Theater is taking the creepiness factor up to 100 with a special screening of the iconic horror film on the big screen paired with a live musical score. At ease, hair on the back of your neck. Nosferatu - A Symphony of Horror features Austin's "emperors of eclecticism," The Invincible Czars, performing a live, updated soundtrack to accompany the suspense fest this Sunday, Sept. 18, from 6 to 9 p.m. ($20). This is an early Halloween treat you don't want to miss.

Joining Cassel for this lively, foot-tapping performance are Newfoundland-born guitarist Keith Murphy and fiddler Jenna Moynihan. Doors are at 6:30 p.m.

Every third weekend in September (except for the last two years), the Arcata Plaza swells with families, revelers, artists, dancers, musicians, crafters, makers and producers for the annual North Country Fair, a two-day celebration of the Fall Equinox, diversity and community. This year, the fair falls on Saturday, Sept. 17, and Sunday, Sept. 18, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and promises all the good stuff we know and love — with 170 art and craft vendors, three music and entertainment stages, local food booths, activities for kids and a daily parade at 1 p.m. (Saturday is the Samba Parade and Sunday is the All-Species Parade). Come out and celebrate being "Together Again," this year's theme.

My long-term goals and short-term plans working it out. On the Count of Three

The Last Minute

On the Count of Three and The Good Boss

By John J. Bennett

screens@northcoastjournal.com

ON THE COUNT OF THREE. Suicide, for an act (force/influence) that will most likely eventually affect us all, is too often marginalized in culture and in conversation due either to fear, false reverence or simple misunderstanding. It becomes an easy punchline when something doesn't go our way, or a caustic epithet cum directive vollied at an enemy-of-the-moment. We spend precious little time, though, in the actual consideration of what the act means, or might mean, to those among us considering it and those left behind to clean up the literal and emotional mess. This is, in part, what On the Count of Three, written by Ari Katcher and Ryan Welch and directed by Jerrod Carmichael, sets out to do. It also leans into the comedy of two goofball friends staring into the abyss, so it may not be accepted as a serious disquisition on the subject, but the humor here, the distinct lack of morbidity regarding the act itself, is a vital component to greater understanding.

Carmichael, an already significant figure in the world of standup comedy turned figurehead and object of media fascination by his perhaps anti-comedic special Rothaniel earlier this year ("Communing with Comedy," June 9, 2022), had not directed a feature before. However, like so many stand-ups, he appears deeply acquainted (maybe more so than many) with the vagaries of inner conflict and concealed emotional life. And, as demonstrated by the brilliant but under-appreciated The Carmichael Show, he has a finely attuned sense of story, as well as a studied ability to condense and clarify a narrative for a visual medium. And now we know he can combine that knowledge, those skills, with a genuine, earned sense of what the camera brings to moviemaking; he's a director, for real.

Val (Carmichael) has a lot on his mind and his job shoveling mulch is probably the least of it. So, he leaves that job, springs his best friend Kevin (Christopher Abbott) from the psychiatric hospital and announces they should seize the day and kill each other. Kevin, having accidentally survived a recent suicide attempt after a lifetime of insurmountable psychic pain, hesitates at first but soon embraces the idea of settling scores before making their grand exit.

Set against the dirty-snow desolation of a northeastern winter, On the Count of Three presents Val and Kevin as unlikely allies in life and in the decision to end it. As they check off items on their last day's to-do list, we come to understand Kevin as a kid who never got an even break, with a legacy of being picked on for being picked on that leads to predation by ostensible caregivers and from there to a life of untenable, untreatable suicidal depression. Val, by comparison, seems to have things mostly handled, despite a continually impossible relationship with his father (J.B. Smoove, playing brilliantly against type) and some daunting changes in his relationship with Natasha (Tiffany Haddish).

The movie doesn't judge either character's mental health or their independent but eventually conjoined decisions to end things. It ultimately succeeds in this balanced perspective and innate sense of fairness. The story wanders farther afield than needed, especially given its humble, conversational tone, but it never strays from the humanity at its center. In approaching self-annihilation as the momentary, permanent turning point it is, On the Count of Three does something quietly revelatory. R. 86M. HULU, AMAZON PRIME, STREAMING.

THE GOOD BOSS, if one will pardon the return of my frequent lamentation, is reminiscent of a nebulous ur-genre of movies that Americans apparently don't make anymore; perhaps we're not self-aware enough to lampoon ourselves like we used to. More likely the audiences don't want it or at least the financiers assume they don't.

Blanco (Javier Bardem) inherited a successful scales manufactory in Madrid. He enjoys the trappings of capitalist success, from his beautifully appointed home to his pick of the constantly rotating staff of female interns. He also seems to earnestly want his employees to feel part of a loving family, overseen by himself, the patriarch. So, when a laid-off employee stages a protest at the gates the very week a provincial oversight committee plans to visit and potentially bestow a long-coveted award, Blanco's foreman falls into a funk and Blanco's most recent extramarital affair yields a troubling revelation. Papa has his work cut out for him.

Writer-director Fernando León de Aranoa (A Perfect Day, 2015) balances the mundanity of mid-level business management with subtly biting satire, and Bardem manages to play it all out with devastatingly hilarious facial plasticity. NR. 120M. ●

Hot Surfperch Moms

By Mike Kelly
washedup@northcoastjournal.com

A school of small rainbow surfperch.

One day I found myself stuck in an elevator with a beautiful pregnant female. Just to make both of us less uncomfortable, I said, “Hey babe, I ain’t into knocked-up chicks anyway, dig?”

She stared at me with her big glassy eyes and characteristically used her large pectoral fins for propulsion. For she was a redbail surfperch (Amphistichus rhodotus).

I sometimes find surfperch of different species washed up on the beach. And I routinely encounter surfperch while snorkeling and sometimes fishing. However, seeing a redbail surfperch in an aquarium on wheels in an elevator was a first. But somehow it seemed normal.

In any event, California is a surfperch hotbed. We have at least 18 of the 23 known species, which includes the world’s only known freshwater surfperch, the tule perch, which lives only in central California. My personal local favorites include the walleye, rainbow, striped, shiner and redbail surfperches. And my elevator companion was a big one — about as big as they get at maybe 16 inches and more than 4 pounds.

After a minute of pretending to ignore me, she said, “Well, gentlemen surfperch like already pregnant lady surfperch just fine. All surfperch species have a very uncommon reproductive mode. Each mature female mates with multiple males during fall and winter. My lucky number this year was seven. I could be carrying 100 babies from seven fathers.”

I said, “Whoa, kinky!”
“Think what you want, human. But your scientists have studied our mating habits and found reproductive advantages they had not previously considered and barely understand.”

“How do you, um, consummate internal fertilization in surf with just fins?” I asked.

“We live most of our lives in the surf zone. But we mate in calm water. Some species of surfperch have a small penis-like projection. Others, like my redbail lovers, have a sexy notched anal fin that helps guide things. And all surfperch have very good aim. We redtails don’t typically breed until we are 3 or 4 years old, but some species of surfperch may be born already sexually mature.”

I asked if she was heading to the surf to give birth. She said, “Nope. We also seek calmer water for birthing. I’m headed to a river mouth estuary to meet my girlfriends and give birth together. I’ve invested a lot of energy in these babies. They may live 14 years and I want them to start life with lots of companions in a relatively safe environment.”

“So, they can fend for themselves right away?” I asked.

She said, “Yes, they emerge almost fully mature and immediately start hunting things like small crustations and worms. As my babies grow, they will even eat small fish like herring and anchovies. But most species of surfperch don’t typically eat fish.”

I didn’t mention the popular sport fishery and culinary desire for redbail surfperch flesh. I personally consider the meat to be overrated but, after being stuck for what felt like an eternity, I was starving. So, I filleted her.

Sure enough, she had dozens of perfectly formed live babies in her. I spared them and vowed to get them safely to the estuary — and to never again keep female redbail surfperch during summertime.

I awoke to find myself still stuck in an elevator. But I wasn’t with baby surfperch. I was with a guy who I had apparently killed and partially eaten. The guy must have been loaded with tryptophan, which is probably why I nodded off.

Then the elevator door opened at the ground floor. I guess we were never actually stuck. It was just a very tall building.●

Biologist Mike Kelly (he/him) is also the author of the book Tigerfish: Traditional and Sport Fishing on the Niger River, Mali, West Africa. It’s available at Amazon or everywhere e-books are sold.

PROPERTY TAX DEFAULT (DELINQUENT) LIST

I, Amy Christensen, Interim-Humboldt County Tax Collector, State of California, certify that:
The real properties listed below were declared to be in tax default at 12:01 a.m. on July 1, 2019, by operation of law pursuant to Revenue and Taxation Code §3436. The declaration of default was due to nonpayment of the total amount due for the taxes, assessments, and other charges levied in fiscal year 2018-2019 that were a lien on the listed real property.
Tax-defaulted real property may be redeemed by payment of all unpaid taxes and assessments, together with the additional penalties and fees, as prescribed by law, or it may be redeemed under an installment plan of redemption.
The amount to redeem, including all penalties and fees, as of September 2022, is shown opposite the parcel number and next to the name of the assessee.
All information concerning redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by Amy Christensen 825 5th St Room 125 Eureka, CA 95501. (707)476-2450.

The assessor's maps and further explanation of the parcel numbering system are available in the assessor's office.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF
Donald Paul Koski CASE NO.
PR2200259

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of Donald Paul Koski
A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner, Teresa Lynn Koski
In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that Teresa Lynn Koski be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.
THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court.
THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.)
The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.
A HEARING on the petition will be held on October 6, 2022 at 1:31 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 6.
For information on how to appear remotely for your hearing, please visit <https://www.humboldt.courts.ca.gov/>
IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.
YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

Free Will Astrology

Week of Sept. 15, 2022

By Rob Brezsny

freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): My reader Monica Ballard has this advice for you Aries folks: "If you don't vividly ask for and eagerly welcome the gifts the Universe has in store for you, you may have to settle for trinkets and baubles. So never settle." That's always useful counsel for you Rams. And in the coming weeks, you will be wise to heed it with extra intensity. Here's a good metaphor to spur you on: Don't fill up on junk snacks or glitzy hors d'oeuvres. Instead, hold out for gourmet feasts featuring healthy, delectable entrées.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): I will remind you about a potential superpower that is your birthright to develop: You can help people to act in service to the deepest truths and strongest love. You can even teach them how to do it. Have you been ripening this talent in 2022? Have you been bringing it more to the forefront of your relationships? I hope so. The coming months will stir you to go further than ever before in expressing this gift. For best results, take a vow to nurture the deepest truths and strongest love in all your thoughts and dealings with others.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your mind is sometimes a lush and beautiful maze that you get lost in. Is that a problem? Now and then it is, yes. But just as often, it's an entertaining blessing. As you wander around amidst the lavish finery, not quite sure of where you are or where you're going, you often make discoveries that rouse your half-dormant potentials. You luckily stumble into unforeseen insights you didn't realize you needed to know. I believe the description I just articulated fits your current ramble through the amazing maze. My advice: Don't be in a mad rush to escape. Allow this dizzying but dazzling expedition to offer you all its rich teachings.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): "Poetry is a life-cherishing force," said Pulitzer Prize-winner Mary Oliver, who published 33 volumes of poetry and read hundreds of other poets. Her statement isn't true for everyone, of course. To reach the point where reading poetry provides our souls with nourishment, we may have to work hard to learn how to appreciate it. Some of us don't have the leisure or temperament to do so. In any case, Cancerian, what are your life-cherishing forces? What influences inspire you to know and feel all that's most precious about your time on earth? Now would be an excellent time to ruminate on those treasures—and take steps to nurture them with tender ingenuity.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Please promise me you will respect and revere your glorious star power in the coming weeks. I feel it's important, both to you and those whose lives you touch, that you exalt and exult in your access to your magnificence. For everyone's benefit, you should play freely with the art of being majestic and regal and sovereign. To do this right, you must refrain from indulging in trivial wishes, passing fancies, and minor attractions. You must give yourself to what's stellar. You must serve your holiest longings, your riveting dreams, and your thrilling hopes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It's impossible to be perfect. It's neither healthy nor productive to obsess on perfectionism. You know these things. You understand you can't afford to get bogged down in overthinking and overreaching and over-polishing. And when you are at your best, you sublimate such manic urges. You transform them into the elegant intention to clarify and refine and refresh. With grace and care, you express useful beauty instead of aiming for hyper-immaculate precision. I believe that in the coming weeks, dear Virgo, you will be a master of these services—skilled at performing them for yourself and others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): According to Libran poet T. S. Eliot,

"What we call the beginning is often the end. And to make an end is to make a beginning. The end is where we start from." Those are your guiding thoughts for the coming days, Libra. You're almost ready to start fresh; you're on the verge of being able to start planning your launch date or grand opening. Now all you have to do is create a big crisp emptiness where the next phase will have plenty of room to germinate. The best way to do that is to finish the old process as completely as possible.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Now and then, you slip into phases when you're poised on the brink of either self-damage or self-discovery. You wobble and lurch on the borderline where self-undoing vies with self-creation. Whenever this situation arises, here are key questions to ask yourself: Is there a strategy you can implement to ensure that you glide into self-discovery and self-creation? Is there a homing thought that will lure you away from the perverse temptations of self-damage and self-undoing? The answers to these queries are always yes—if you regard love as your top priority and if you serve the cause of love over every other consideration.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): "Sometimes serendipity is just intention unmasked," said Sagittarian author Elizabeth Berg. I suspect her theory will be true for you in the coming weeks. You have done an adroit job of formulating your intentions and collecting the information you need to carry out your intentions. What may be best now is to relax your focus as you make room for life to respond to your diligent preparations. "I'm a great believer in luck," said my Uncle Ned. "I've found that the harder I work, the more luck I have." He was correct, but it's also true that luck sometimes surges your way when you've taken a break from your hard work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Tips to get the most out of the next six weeks: 1. Be the cautiously optimistic voice of reason. Be the methodical motivator who prods and inspires. Organize as you uplift. Encourage others as you build efficiency. 2. Don't take other people's apparent stupidity or rudeness as personal affronts. Try to understand how the suffering they have endured may have led to their behavior. 3. Be your own father. Guide yourself as a wise and benevolent male elder would. 4. Seek new ways to experience euphoria and enchantment, with an emphasis on what pleasures will also make you healthier.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Aquarian author Richard Ford has advice for writers: "Find what causes a commotion in your heart. Find a way to write about that." I will amend his counsel to apply to all of you non-writers, as well. By my reckoning, the coming weeks will be prime time to be gleefully honest as you identify what causes commotions in your heart. Why should you do that? Because it will lead you to the good decisions you need to make in the coming months. As you attend to this holy homework, I suggest you direct the following invitation to the universe: "Beguile me, mystify me, delight me, fascinate me, and rouse me to feel deep, delicious feelings."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): "I am lonely, yet not everybody will do," observed Piscean author Anaïs Nin. "Some people fill the gaps, and others emphasize my loneliness," she concluded. According to my reading of the astrological omens, Pisces, it's your task right now to identify which people intensify your loneliness and which really do fill the gaps. And then devote yourself with extra care to cultivating your connections with the gap-fillers. Loneliness is sometimes a good thing—a state that helps you renew and deepen your communion with your deep self. But I don't believe that's your assignment these days. Instead, you'll be wise to experience intimacy that enriches your sense of feeling at home in the world. You'll thrive by consorting with allies who sweeten your love of life. ●
